Campaign Urging Research
for Eosinophilic Disease

Eosinophilic disease is a very complicated and complex disease that attacks the digestive system and blood. It depletes the body of iron and essential nutrients necessary for proper development and physical growth. In addition, the symptoms associated with this disease are painful cramping, bleeding, vomiting, and polyps. In many cases, children develop severe damage to their digestive tracts. Dan and Jen's daughters, Ashlee and Cierra, suffer from this incurable, chronic disease.
