What is Eosinophilic Esophagitis?

Eosinophilic GI diseases occur when parts of the digestive system mistake food proteins for parasites. Eosinophil cells are then sent to attack the invaders, leading to inflammation in the digestive system.

This in turn can cause vomiting, choking, diarrhea, sleep disturbance, food refusal, weight loss and severe pain. Diagnosis and monitoring can only be done through regular endoscopies with biopsies.

Treatments can be unpleasant and may include severe diet restrictions, daily steroids, and feeding tubes. However, without these treatments, patients risk irreparable damage to their digestive systems.)
